Assad sends message to Oadhafi

DAMASCUS (R) — Syrian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam left Damascus Sunday with a message from President Hafez Al Assad to Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi, the official Syrian news agency SANA reported. It said the message dealt with results of the Arab summit conference at Fez, Morocco, which ended early on Friday. Earlier Sunday, it was announced that Col. Qadhafi, who had boycotted the Fez summit, had a telephone conversation Saturday night with President Assad on various aspects of the Middle East situation. Libva was the only member of the 22-state Arab League to refuse to attend the Fez summit, which endorsed a Middle East peace plan widely seen as implicitly acknowledging Israel's right to exist. Libya has described the plan as "high treason," and said it wanted to completely dissociate itself with it.

Arafat returns to Tunis from Algeria

TUNIS (R) - Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) leader Yasser Arafat returned to Tunis Sunday after a visit to Algeria where he said the results of the Arab summit in Morocco seemed positive. Mr. Arafat had gone to Algiers for talks with President Chadli Benjedid after attending the summit in Fez. He moved to Tunis after the evacuation of Palestinian fighters from Beirut and is expected in Rome next Wednesday to meet Pope John Paul and Italian President Sandro Pertini. The Algerian Press Service (APS) quoted him as saving the results of the summit seemed positive. Mr. Arafat said President Benjedid had pledged to support Palestine whether it was "attacked or attacking," APS rep-

PFAEFFIKON, Switzerland (R) - Thirty-eight West German tourists were killed Sunday in a level-crossing collision between their bus and a local train, Zurich canton police said. Eyewitnesses said the crossing gates were open when the bus, from Boeblingen near Stuttgart, was hit by the train and smashed into several sections. The impact threw passengers and parts of the bus into maize fields on either side of the tracks. The front of the bus burst into flame, setting alight a nearby booth used by the crossing guard. Police said the accident, on the outskirts of the village of Pfaeffikon 18 kilometres east of Zurich, left nine people injured.

Typhoon Judy hits central Japan

TOKYO (R) — Eight people were killed and 15 reported missing in widespread flooding and islides Sunday when Typhoon Judy hit central Japan, police said. The victims included three people buried in separate landslides and a fireman drowned in a river while helping reinforce an embankment. The Typhoon was expected to reach the densely populated Tokyo area about midnight, weathermen said. With winds upto 108 kilometres an hour. Typhoon Judy has already brought heavy rain, flooding more than 40,000 houses in Tokyo.

Pakistani weather rocket explodes

KARACHI (R) - A Pakistani weather rocket exploded during a test last week injuring three scientists and two technicians, authoritative sources said Sunday. The sources said the eight-metre rocket exploded during tests on its fuel system in a laboratory at a rocket firing site about 80 kil-ometres west of Karachi, damaging several buildings. No official statement has been issued about the explosion, which the sources said occurred last Thursday, but the incident has been reported by several local newspapers. The rocket was being tested by scientists of Pakistan's Space and Upper Atmosphere Research Commission (Superco).

Iraq prepares new peace proposals to end Gulfwar

AMMAN (Petra) — The Iraqi government has prepared a new peace initiative to settle the Iran-Iraq dispute and end the war between the two countries immediately, the deputy chairman of the Arab and International Committee at the Iraqi National Council Sa'd Qassim Hammoudi told the Baghdad correspondent of the Jordanian News Agency, Petra.

Mr. Hammoudi said the Iraqi nitiative calls for the immediate halt of military operations by both Iran and Iraq as well as resolving pending problems between the two countries on the basis of securing the unity, sovereignty, independence, safety and territorial integrity and non-interference in the internal affairs of the two cou-

Mr. Hammoudi added that the Iragi initiative is based on United Nations resolutions and will be submitted to the InterParliamentary Union (IPU) conference scheduled to begin in Rome on Sunday. The Iraqi National Council has consulted Arab and other countries regarding the initiative and received positive replies from these countries, "It can be said that there is an Arab and international unanimity on the Iraqi initiative" and it is expected to be approved by the conference, he said.

Mr. Hammoudi said the Iraqi government has asked the general secretariat of the Arab Parliamentary Union (APU) to adopt the Iraqi peace initiative and submit it to the IPU conference as a unified Arab initiative.

He said his delegation will have intensive talks with the Arab parliamentary delegations on adopting the plan as a joint Arab initiative to stop the Iraqi-Iranian AMMAN (Petra) — Speaker of the Upper House of Parliament Bahjat Al Talhouni left Amman on Sunday for Rome at the head of a delegation to attend the meetings of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) conference which will begin on Sept. 13.

The delegation includes Upper House of Parliament members Anastas Hanania, Abdul Rahman Khalifeh Ali Al Hindawi and Ahmad Al Khalil.

Speaker Talhouni said the 10-day conference will discuss the Middle East issues and the Israeli aggression on Lebanon as well as disarmament and other intemational issues. Elections for the executive committee of the union will take place during the conference. Coordination among the Arab parliamentary delegations will take place before discussing the topics involving the Arab World, Mr. Talhouni said.

Police recover 46 bodies from U.S. helicopter crash 21 Iranians

MANNHEIM, West Germany (R) — Police said they had recovered 46 bodies Sunday from the wreckage of a U.S. military helicopter that crashed and exploded on a motorway near Mannheim airport Saturday.

A police spokesman said two cameramen from the American Forces broadcasting Network (AFN) had been aboard when the Boeing CH-47 Chinook helicopter crashed, killing 38 civilian parachutists and six U.S. servicemen.

U.S. army headquarters in Heidelberg said the six U.S. soldiers included an army officer from Heidelberg, who was also a sports parachutist, and five crew from Coleman Barracks, north of Mannheim. One of the crew had joined the group despite being off duty, a spokeswoman said.

Police said the final civilian death toll included 23 members of the club Parachutiste de Toulon, France, nine Britons from the Swansea Skydivers Club, and six West Germans from Mannheim. Four women were among the

Israeli planes again attack Syrian missiles

TEL AVIV (Agencies) — Israeli planes attacked a Syrian anti-aircraft missile site in Lebanon Sunday for the third time in less than a week as clashes were reported along nearby ceasefire lines.

A military spokesman said the next day, with Israel claiming the raid destroyed a mobile SAM-9 missile launching vehicle 10 kilometres east of Bhamdoun on the main Beirut-Damascus highway. All the planes returned safely to base, he said.

Similar installations were knocked out in the same area on Wednesday and Thursday, and Israeli leaders Sunday repeated warnings that they would not allow the deployment of Syrian missiles in Lebanon.

The latest raid came shortly after the military spokesman reported that three Israeli soldiers were killed in a rocket attack in eastern Lebanon on Friday.

He said a fourth man was wounded when a bazooka rocket was fired at an Israeli patrol north of the village of Aammiq in the Bekaa Valley, only a few kilometres from the targets of the Israeli air raids.

Fahoum: U.S. role in Beirut was not neutral

DAMASCUS (R) --- A Palestinian leader Sunday said the United States was on the side of Israel when special envoy Philip Habib negotiated the agreement for the evacuation of the Palestinian forces from west Beirut.

Khaled Al Fahoum, speaker of the Palestine National Council (purliament), told reporters in Damascus that the Palestinians had never declared they wanted to stay permanently in Lebanon but were there only temporarily.

"So the American role in Lebanon was not a neutral role, be said "It was completely on the side of Israel and against the Palestinians. So I am not satisfied with the mission of Philip Habib in Lebanon." Mr. Fahoum added: "We are mature enough to have the right to self-determination. We don't want to destroy any country. We don't want to destroy any state. We don't want to throw anybody into the sea, but we are going to resist being thrown into the desert."

Mr. Fahoum said the Palestine Central Council, which liases between the Palestine Liberation Organisation's Executive Committee and the National Council, would meet in Damascus during the next two weeks to review the evacuation of the fighters from Beirut and the outcome of last week's Arab summit in Fez, Morocco.

BAHRAIN (R) — Saudi Arabia will deport 21 people arrested during a demonstration by Iranian pilgrims in the Islamic holy city of Medina on Friday, the Saudi Press Agency quoted Interior Ministry sources as saying Sunday.

The agency said on Friday that police dispersed thousands of Iranian pilgrims gathered in Medina for a political meeting and seized pictures of Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The agency said that no-one was injured in the demonstration, Mr. Menz had put the number the second in three days involving Iranian pilgrims. Saudi Arabia has warned that pilgrims who brought political propaganda or ideological pictures or publications into the kingdom would be punished and deported.

Last year there were clashes between Saudi police and some of the 75,000 Iranians who made the pilgrimage. The Iranian news agency IRNA reported Sunday in a despatch from Medina that the leader of the Iranian pilgrims, Hojatoleslam Mousavi Kho'ini, had sent a note of protest to the Saudi interior minister calling for the immediate release of the pilgrims.

The fighting appeared to have broken out when a Muslim delegation from west Beirut set out

Gunmen opened fire in the direction of the convoy and a rocket-propelled grenade exploded in the air, Beirut Radio said. Since the last Syrian troops and Palestinian fighters left Beirut at the end of August, the Lebanese army and police have been clearing leftist militias off the streets of west Beirut and gradually taking over their positions.

The plan had gone ahead with few hitches until Sunday's clashes. Earlier in the day one person was killed and two were wounded in gunbattles between police and a pro-Syrian group near the city centre, security sources said.

The fighting broke out when the gunmen tried to recover a car confiscated by the police at a roadblock, they added.

hdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon. Following is the text of the Shultz statement:

Thank you for this opportunity to discuss with you recent developments in the Middle East. These developments are of immense importance. The positive, bipartisan support for President Reagan's peace initiative has been evident to us and is deeply appreciated. That support is essential to the conduct of a vigorous and creative foreign policy, and, accordingly, your willingness to meet with me on short notice is especially significant.

In recent weeks, the world's attention has focused on the Middle East, and particularly on our diplomatic efforts there to end the bloodshed, and to bring a deeper side pressure or imposed solutions and lasting peace to the area. With to carry on with its task of national the successful evacuation of the reconciliation. The desperate PLO from Beirut, we have turned need for economic reconstruction our attention to next steps necessary for peace: The withdrawal reconciliation and the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon of foreign forces. and the restoration of central authority in that country; and, of the Lebanese people and will be a prime importance, the reinvigoration of the Camp David peace process designed to fairly resolve the underlying Arab-Israeli dispute. Lebanon, of course, has suffered grievously over the last several months; let alone the last several years. Philip Habib's and Morris Draper's successful negotiation of the withdrawal of the PLO from Beirut can only be regarded as the first phase of our approach to the problem in Lebanon. As the president announced, the U.S. Marine contingent of the multinational force will begin withdrawing from Beirut tomorrow. The government of Lebanon, meanwhile is working progress in the overall search for a carefully but surely to reestablish authority over all parts of Beirut, of Lebanon are distinct and must with the Lebanese army and police increasing, assuming security separately from our Middle East responsibilities in the city.

Second phase

A second phase in our Lebanon diplomacy is now before us. As all of you know, the president is sending Ambassador Draper to Lebanon to begin the next phase of negotiations on withdrawal of foreign forces from that country. The of universal concern not just to the people of the region, but to the United States and other countries as well. The events of the last month have demonstrated once again that we Americans have a special responsibility in the efforts to bring peace to the area. No one else has the credibility -- and therefore the ability -- to provide the crucial link to all sides.

Detailed review

The president's Middle East peace initiative is based on an intensive and detailed review of the problem by the president and his advisors. We have discussed the issues in detail with members of this committee and others in the Congress, with former government officials, and many other knowledgeable people. The paramount conclusions of that review are that (1) it is time to address, forcefully and directly, the underlying Palestinian issues, and (2) genuine success depends upon broadening participation in the negotiations to include, as envisaged in the Camp David accords. Egypt, Israel, Jordan, and the representatives of the Palestinian people.

In taking this initiative, the president established two conditions - we will remain firmly committed both to the principles of the Camp David accords and to the security of Israel. The Camp David frame ork has one key element that ail other peace plans lack -- it has been successful: It produced the only treaty of peace between Israel and an Arab country, and the completion of the disengagement and return of the Sinai. Moreover, the Camp David framework has the necessary room for negotiations to fulfil the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and to reach peace treaties between Israel and her neighbours. As President Carter said a week ago, the day after the president gave his speech, "There is absolutely...nothing in the president's speech...nor in the information be sent to the Israelis which is contrary to either the letter or the spirit of Camp David. It is absolutely compatible with the Camp David agreement." Our initiative will give the provisions of Camp David their full meaning and a new dynamism. I DIS Tenewed dvi Camp David negotiations will ensure Israeli security, and we emphatically will require the product of the negotiations to do so. As the president's speech noted, this country, this administration, and the president personally are committed to Israel's security. This same renewed dynamism also will provide appropriate regard to the "legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and their just requirements." Camp David itself calls for the residents of the West Bank and Gaza and other Palestinians are agreed to participate in negotiating the two primary means of achieving those rights -- autonomous self-government, and final status after the five-year transitional period. By renewing the process, we seek to fulfil the hope of Camp David-Israel and her neighbours, Jordan, Egypt and the Palestinians engaged in fair, direct and successful negotiations on how they will all live together.

Resolition 242

The Camp David accords provide that these negotiated arrangements on final status must be "just, comprehensive... durable," and "based on Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 in all their parts." Security Council Resolution 242 sets forth the two states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every state in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognised boundaries free from threats or acts of force." As it very revealing. We believe these principles apply on all fronts, but our position on the extent of withdrawal the extent and nature of the peace and security arrangements being offered in return. Israel, Jordan; Egypt and the elected representatives of the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza will negotiate the final boundaries, recognising Palestinian legitimate rights, and securing what Resolution 338 calls a "just and durable peace." We will support positions in those negotiations which we believe are fair. Those positions include:

1. Israeli sovereignty, Palestinian state: It is the president's supported and will continue to belief that the Palestinian problem support: mot be resolved throu sovereignty or control over the West Bank and Gaza. Accordingly, we will not support such a solution. We will also not support the formation of a Palestinian state in those negotiations. There is no foundation of political support in Israel or in the United States for such a solution and peace cannot be achieved by that route. The preference we will pursue in the final status negotiations is some form of association of the West Bank and Gaza with Jordan. 2. Self determination: In the Middle East context, the term "self-determination" has been indentified exclusively with the formation of a Palestinian state.

We will not support this definition of self-determination. We do believe that the Palestinians must take a leading role in determining their own future and fully support the provision in the Camp David agreement providing for the elected representatives of the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza to decide how they shall govern themselves consistent with the provisions of their agreement in the final status negotiations. 3. Jerusalem: We will fully support the position that Jerusalem must be undivided and that its status must be determined through negotiations. We do not recognise unilateral acts with respect to final status issues.

Negotiations on the final status of the area will not start until a self-governing authority for the territories is firmly in place. Negotiations about the transitional phase have been in progress for the last three years. In those negotiations we have consistently expressed our views to our negotiating partners, Israel and Egypt, as issues arose. Most recently, we informed our partners of how these separate expressions fit into the overall view of Palestinian will be significantly influenced by self-government during a transitional period.

Transitional period

In our view, the objective of the transitional period is the peaceful and orderly transfer of authority from Israel to the Palestinian inhabitants, while ensuring that all necessary measures are taken to assure Israeli security. We have emphasised that this period is a transitional status, not final, and that therefore the provisions relating to it should not prejudice the final status. In light of those views, we have threat to Israel's security. As the president noted in his

--provisions which represent a speech, we are attempting to reinvigorate the autonomy negotiations. That effort would be assisted to a great extent by a freeze of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, which was requested during the Camp David negotiations. Our concern is not with their legality or illegality, but with their effect on the peace pro-The president's initiative follows over three years of active negotiations, continuous discussions of the issues involved over the same period, and, most recently, two trips to the Middle East by the secretary of state this year, and additional trips by Ambassador Fairbanks and by others working on the negotiations. We have put these ideas in some detail to the Israelis and the key Arab states, including Jordan and Egypt. They are now examining the proposals. It would be surprising if they liked or disliked all of them. We have received reactions from some of our interlocutors. We are studying those reactions. We confidently expect to continue our discussions. Mr. Chairman, after the president's speech, you were quoted as commending the president for having said "what must be said." Those words are most apt - for we are articulating a reasonable basis for a negotiated compromise among the parties. We emphasise that any agreement must be based on the free give-and-take of the negotiating process. We do not guarantee to any party the outcome of the negotiations on any issue. The president has now stated publicly some U.S. positions on key issues. We now call for the parties contemplated by the Camp David agreement to join us in seeking peace.

In launching this initiative, the president determined that he would stay fully involved and fully committed to the principles he enunciated. We will be working hard over the next weeks in light of the new dynamic the initiative told our partners that we have introduces to bring the peace process forward. I pledge to you that ativity, the persistence, and the dogged determination to succeed which marked the successful effort ources subject to fair safeguards in Beirut. I also emphasise to vou that we recognise that our effort is to bring lasting, effective and just peace to this area. That goal can hardly be accomplished in a few short weeks. We ask you to stay with the president in this determination to sustain this effort and to look for the long term, just solution. We believe, deeply and purposefully, that peace can come between Arabs and Jews. No greater purpose can be placed before us all than a just and lasting peace.

Life may be frustrating for the Palestinian fighters from Beirut

By Thomas Thomson

DAMASCUS - Palestinian_fighters from the siege of west Beirut, proclaimed heroes as they arrived in Syria vowing to carry on their struggle, may find life frustrating in one of the confrontation states with Israel.

Though Damascus has said it will give Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) guerrillas a free hand to continue the fight against Israel, it has set firm rules on how they will behave, Western diplomats said.

About 6,000 Palestinian fighters, half of them from the Syrian-led Palestine Liberation Army, arrived in Syria in a six-day shuttle by land and sea during the evacuation to eight countries which ended two weeks ago. Crowds waving Palestininan and Syrian flags greeted the veterans of the 10-week siege as heroes and the fighters replied with long bursts of fire into the air from their assault rifles. But diplomats said the PLO has been told it will be subject to Syrian discipline and the fighters will live in camps after being disarmed.

Syria, home for about 250,000 Palestinians, is already the official headquarters of the PLO and Damascus is the seat of the Palestine National Council (parliament in exile).

President Hafez Al Assad said recently fighters arriving in his country would be accommodated in "suitable places" and would be allowed to continue to work for their cause.

"Their weapons are their property and will remain so," he was quoted by the West German magazine Stern as saying. But diplomats said they believed the reality of life for the fighters is likely to be a little stricter.

"My understanding is that these people will be living in military camps mostly some distance from Damascus and will be disarmed." one senior diplomat said. Under the U.S.-engineered evacuation plan, Palestinian fighters were allowed to leave Beirut carrying only light arms. The destination of the fighters had not decision to leave the city where been published, but diplomats Syrian troops and Palestinian guesaid most were sent on arrival to rrillas had fought side by side. The camps near Adra, about 30 km Syrians also left Beirut under the north east of Damascus, and close evacuation plan.

to Suweida, about 90 km south of the capital.

Behind barbed wire

Eyewitnesses said rows of tents: have been erected behind the bar-. bed wire perimeter fences and Syrian security men stood guard at the gates. Syria faced a dilemma over how to handle the fighters, diplomats added. As a hard-line confrontation state against any Middle East peace settlement until the Arabs reach a strategic balance. with Israel, Syria should be supporting the guerrillas in their fight. diplomats said.

Syrian state-run media, for example, have urged Arab leaders to reject President Reagan's Middle East peace plan announced. two weeks ago which called for Palestinian self-government in the West Bank and Gaza in association with Jordan.

But the diplomats said Damascus was also concerned not to: allow the guerrillas to launch attacks that might provoke Israeli retaliation against Syria.

Syria is eager to keep a strategic hold on the Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon which controls the approaches to Damascus.

A senior Palestinian officer, Colonel Abu Raad, said last week that PLO forces would begin ope-. rations against Israel after a twoweek holiday and refreshner training, with asaults from the Bekaa valley and guerrilla raids behind Israeli lines.

-Palestinian leaders have complained in the past of Syrian restrictions on launching guerrilla attacks against the Israeliannexed Golan Heights and Israel from behind Syrian lines in Lebanon would bring retribution. Syria originally refused to accept fighters from Beirut, saying it was their duty to stay in the city and fight. Diplomats said they thought Syria feared it would import the problems that faced Lebanon plus a legacy of bitterness from guerrillas who felt let down by lack of Arab support.

President Assad later offered to take in as many fighters as the PLO sent, saying it was a PLO

The value of life

ALL the passengers were looking at each other trying innocently to find reassuring looks on the faces of their neighbours. The captain had just announced, for the second time, that the second engine of the plane was not functioning. A heavy silence prevailed, some passengers were looking out of the windows to see and try to understand why those "blasted engines" failed them. Fear with me always expresses itself in a sort of paralysis; I stayed sailed to my seat, my throat was dry, my hands were moist and, paradoxically, happy images were running before my eyes.

I thought of my life, of what I had done, and I was filled with such a feeling of frustration because there were still so many things I wanted to do and say, and this feeling of unfulfillment then was

I told rayself that if I made it through I would see things dif-ferently. What has always seemed essential, all of a sudden became unimportant. Those details that were pestering me did not matter anymore and were put in their right dimension of "petty details". I told myself that one should not look for happiness very far as it is elmost always within easy reach.

The plane landed without problems and we were all sound and agers looked at each other but this time differently - with relief. One could see sympathy on all the faces as they were now bound together in solidarity against the danger that they had

One of the passengers while leaving the plane told me; "We care much more about life than we like to admit and when I think that people waste their lives in wars - what a waste."

Abu Odeh: Fez is a clear reply to Israeli allegations

AMMAN (Petra) — Acting Prime Minister, Acting Foreign Minister and Information Minister Adnan Abu Odeh has declared that the Fez summit conference was a clear reply to Israel's allegations that it seeks peace and that it is the Arabs who are on the rejection side.

During his meeting on Monday with the international fact-finding committee investigating Israel's violation of international law during its invasion of Lebanon and occupation of Lebanese territory. Mr. Abu Odeh said that the Arabs, including the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), are working for a peaceful and just settlement securing peace for every state and people in the area.

Mr. Abu Odeh pointed out that Israel's declared and pre-meditated objective behind its

Mr. Abu Odeh also explained Israel's expansionist policy which is contained in two steps, the first to impose the fait accompli and the second to give legitimacy of this fait accompli. He said Israel has followed this policy even before it existed as a state through the institutions it had set up in 1948.

Israel is now applying the same policy in the West Bank and in Lebanon. In the West Bank, Israel is trying to gain legitimacy for the annexation of the territory through the agent organisations it has created, he said.

Mr. Abu Odeh said Israel's violation of international law, which began with the annexation of Jerusalem, the construction of settlements, and settling Israelis in the occupied territories has escalated to the point of even changing the name of the West Bank to Judea and Samaria, the application of the Israeli law on the settlements there, the violation of human rights in the occupied territories on all levels, including linking the right to work with political loyalty to the agent organisations set up by the occupation authorities.

Mr. Abu Odeh added that the only way to end Israel's violation of international law and human rights is to reach just and conprehensive peace capable of achieving for the Palestinian people their right to self-determination on their national soil.

The need is still urgent

THE PROBLEMS in education referred to the other day by Education Minister Sa'id Al Tal revolve around the difficulty of recruiting and keeping an adequate supply of qualified teachers and administrators. What applies to the education sector applies equally well to all other sectors of Jordanian life. To have identified the problem is in itself a refreshing indicator that the authorities responsible for such matters wish to deal with their root causes. It is easy for an outside observer to reflect upon the inadequate pay scale for public sector employees. But the problem is deeper than pay. The problem relates to how employees in the public sector perceive their role. Are they dedicated servants of the citizenry, or are they unmotivated bureaucrats delighted to have the security of a life-long government post and a retirement pension?

The question of pay, however valid, is not the entire matter. There are few civil services in the world where pay scales can compete with the private sector, and it would be suicidal for Jordan to try to compete only on the basis of pay with the oil economies all around it. The key elements that we suggest should be addressed more diligently are those of accountability and merit. The two go together hand-in-hand, and should be studied on that

The weak link in the Jordanian civil service is the absence of a strict system of accountability in which poor service is cause for punishment and good service is cause for promotion and material or moral reward. For whom does a Jordanian civil servant work? For his immediate supervisor? For his minister? For his country and king? For a concept of nationhood that is compelling in its motivation? These elements are sometimes unclear, to the public servant as well as to the public itself. The urgent need now - as the people in charge of education have reminded us - is for Jordan to address the problems caused by erratic application of the principles of accountability and merit in the public sec-

In the light of the positive results reached at the Fez summit, the Arab joint effort is taking a new and decisive turn at which the summit results sho-

It is only fair to say that the Jordanian clear conscience played an important role in creating a suitable climate and reaching solid results during the summit meetings.

After the summit closed, the realisation of its plans and decisions will definitely be the criterion for testing Arab commitment and will.

A genuine display of this will is more urgent now than ever before. Such a will renders it possible to fruitfully manipulate the positive reactions the Arab peace plan has met throughout the world, and effectively confront the Israeli resistance to the peace efforts and the development of the peace process in the Middle East.

The only factor Israel on which relies is its belief that the Arabs might make decisions, but they are never capable of putting them into practice. The time has come for us. Arabs, to prove wrong all such allegations and bring to life a subtle formula linking the decisions we make to an efficient mechanism for implementing them.

The Fez summit should be made into "a summit of Arab practicality". This is what the Arab masses have learned to regard as imperative for a presentable and effective approach to world rea-

Al Dustour: Post-Fez priorities

The question that now poses itself is: What after the Fez summit?

The Arab heads of state have met, discussed the issues on the summit agenda and issued their final communique and decisions. Nevertheless, a consistent evaluation of the summit outcome should be built on objective examination of Arab realities, as well as factors and conditions limiting Arab strength and ability.

Due preoccupation with a teasonable level of mutual understanding and solidarity, maintenance of communication channels and continued coordination are decisive factors for Arab ability to move fruitfully at the political level--a seemingly sole possibility at the present time.

The Israeli rejection of the Arab proposals demanding complete withdrawal from the occupied territories should be given sufficient consideration. Begin allegedly takes it for a partition of Israel. Hence, an Arab static reality, incapable of positive confrontation, will only facilitate the Israeli annexation of the occupied territories, the proclamation of which will only be a formality.

The highest price is to be paid by those suffering under the grounding voke of occupation. The post-Fez era is the more difficult. Reliance on international legitimacy presupposes clarity and specification on our behalf when presenting our views. Every Arab perspective is liable to meet counter-perspectives and various proposals. Peace in the Middle East is more than an Arab concern. Its realisation is a regional and intemational demand that involves the best part of the world public opinion.

In approaching these realities, it is not only making decisions that matters, but also the ways to implement them with full adherence to realistic and objective standards.

DE FACTONOMICS

Enhancing Afro-Arab cooperation

THE JORDAN CENTER for Studies and Information is bosting this week, September 11-14, 1982 a seminar on Afro-Arab cooperation with the participation of fourteen scholars from abroad and forty Jordanian intellectuals and policy-makers. Many issues will be discussed by the participants with some are not only relevant to Afro-Arab cooperation but would be of analytical use in any other regional grouping among the developing countries.

Thus, the seminar is scheduled to consider political relations and developments, economic cooperation, cultural interaction, alliances and conflicts, potential for regional development, and demographic aspects. I look at this seminar with high interest not necessarily because of its immediate impact or priority but in the context of long-term prospects for regional cooperation as part of the south-south cooperation. Therefore, I would like to present some observation knowing that I do not have the benefit of writing after the seminar is concluded. However, this may be an advantage in itself of being free from the influence of the seminar presentations and discussions.

Cooperation among developing countries, economic, technical and political, may take many forms ranging from peaceful coexistence and good neighbourly relations to complete unification. In economics, this may take five stages or phases, namely, free trade area, customs union, common market, economic union and complete economic integration.

A study of economic cooperation and integration experience of the Third World would reveal very interesting and relevant observations:

- 1. Regional groupings among most of the developing countries were stronger under colonialism than after political independence. The emergence of national states was given first priority over regional cooperation, a fact that led to disintegration, particularly in
- the 1970's. 2. Where the developing countries have copied the experience of the European Community in achieving economic integration and political coordination, they were surprised to see how little the impact of their integration was, particularly in trade. 3. The existence of a favourable political atmosphere was in all cases of regional groupings conducive to the success of such cooperation. However, the political setting in developing countries is usually characterised by instability and at best maximises the short-term obj-

> 4. The process of developing is a dynamic one that embodies many social and economic changes that may create effects which con-tradict with a long-term commitment of regional cooperation and integration.

Accordingly, the approach has shifted from the old one of concluding an economic unity agreement which will be shattered later on when details are needed, into a more pragmatic one which is based on the following:

a) The creation of joint economic ventures and institutions which will outline any political crisis among the cooperating countries for example, the transport and industrial joint companies between Jordan and

b) Leaving the door open, to one degree or another, to the market forces to have their full effect on trade and/or the movement of the factors of production of labour and capital. c) Subscribing into regional ardiess of the strength of political relations. To what extent are these points relevant to Afro-Arab cooperation?

institutions which can function, more or less, reg-

Afro-Arab cooperation can get a fresh boost with the current emphasis upon southsouth cooperation. The Arab countries have created special institutions to provide development loans, aid and technical assistance to African countries. Total contracted Arab loans to African countries are estimated at $7 billion. In addition, some direct private investment was effected in African countries. As I said in a previous article. Jordan can play a positive role in Afro-Arab cooperation. Our role should not be belittled due to the fact that we do not produce yet nor export oil. I suggested that we can offer training opportunities in our vocational training institutions, dispatch some experts in economic management, education, agriculture and other areas to the African countries, and participate in Arab missions to African countries to assess their needs.

In the long-term, the Red Sea region could be a base for Afro-Arab cooperation. In addition to expanding their trade, tourism, capital and labour flows, countries of this region could reach security arrangements that leave out any polarisation and conflict in such region. Afro-Arab cooperation was deep in history, it is now being reconsidered, and its horizons extend far into the future. It thus has to be approached systematically and rationally.

The Middle East peace table takes shape

By Rami G. Khouri

If the recent initiative by United States President Ronald Reagan to focus on the need for a permanent and fair settlement of the Palestinian problem does not in itself win the confidence of all concerned, it should at least win a literary award. One has to read the speech of Mr. Reagan carefully, and several times over. to appreciate its subtle points, and the substlety is very much linked to the language and the precise use of words.

The premise upon which Mr. Reagan and his foreign policy team appear to be working is two-fold: 1) that the ironclad American commitment to Israeli "security" will give Israel the confidence to negotiate details of a lasting peace with Palestinians whose own commitment to peace will be established during the negotiating process; and 2) that the openended nature of the final arrangements that will determine the status of the Palestinian areas of the West Bank and Gaza should be sufficiently attractive to elicit Arab interest in discussing the matter further.

These elements are very closely reflected in the actual language of Mr. Reagan's proposals, and it is through an analysis of the language that one tends to dwell upon the weaknesses and shortcomings of the Reagan initiative. The important factor will be: To what extent do the weaknesses of the Reagan approach cancel out its positive elements? In the short run, it should not be necessary to make this calculation with the aim of reaching a final verdict for or against the Reagan move. It is not a plan that has to be formally accepted or rejected. It is a series of American clarifications on central issues in the Palestine-Israel conflict and the related conflict between Israel and existing Arab states. As much, it is a catalogue of positions that the United States will support or will not support in the course of future negotiations. The fact that the Arab summit at Fez did not accept or reject the Reagan initiative, but acknowleedged it and expressed its desire to know more about it, should be taken as a reciprocal, generally positive

Camp David once more?

Is the Arab hesitation about the Reagan initiative of the same nature and depth as the Arab objections to the Camp David framework accord for the West Bank and Gaza? Not exactly. Mr. Reagan's clarifications have blunted some Arab concerns about the vagueness of the Camp David framework. But the weaknesses of the Reagan approach reflect in part the same weaknesses of the Camp David accords, and these can be appreciated by a thorough reading of the Reagan speech.

The problem remains, as it has always been, one of approach and attitude. The American approach to the Arab-Israeli conflict remains fundamentally tilted in favour of Israeli statehood and security as the benchmarks against which new developments in the Palestinian arena have to be measured.

Mr. Reagan's speech referred 14 times to Israeli "security", while it talked of the Palestinias only in terms of "homelessness... a just solution to their claims... political aspirations... legitimate rights... just requirements... selfgovernment... control of domestic authority... and autonomy.

These references to the Palestinians studiously omitted the negotiating parties, and not by the thrid party Americans.
While this is true in technical terms, one is left with the feeling that we are still being asked to accept a process of national reconstitution for the Palestinians that is determined primarily by what is politically possible in the Washington-Tel Aviv axis. We are impressed by the ability of the American leadership to see its own shortcomings, as reflected in the inadequacy of Camp David. and take a major step forward to overcome those shortcomings. But we remain to be convinced that the United States has decided to apply the crucial principle of reciprocity in its attitude to the any mention of statehood, self-determination, independence or national political rights, an omission that the Americans will argue is somewhat offset by Mr.Reagan's clear statement that the final status of the West Bank and Gaza must be determined through negotiations. Therefore it is not ruled out that the Palestinians could have their own state one day in those areas, the Americans would say, and the Arabs should see the Reagan initiative as a series of American positions that does not, indeed, cannot, rule out the statehood that is demanded by the Palestinians. That can only be agreed upon or rejected by Palestinian-Israeli conflict. The language of the Reagan speech last week is testimony both to the steps forward that the Americans have taken, and to the steps forward that they still need to take before they can be accepted in the Arab World as truly fair and impartial mediators.

A desire to talk

The Americans have indicated that they wish to talk. and the Arabs at Fez replied that they, too, wish to talk. One is reminded of the several months of negotiations that took place when Henry Kissinger and the North Viewhich they would negotiate a peace in Vietnam. Once the shape of the table was agreed upon, the substantive talks started. What is happening now, with the Reagan move and the Fez summit declaration, is that the Arabs and the Americans are negotiating the shape of the table. The important thing in such a process is for both sides to tnamese were arguing about the shape of the table over reaffirm regularly their genuine desire for a peace that is agreed upon through a negotiating process based on the principle of reciprocity and equal treatment for all -- the same principle that is so crucial in the United States as the basis of the legal system, the due process of law.

The Arab plan agreed upon at Fez talks of dual statehood for Palestine and for Israel, and security guarantees for all. The American approach, as quantified in the Reagan speech, mentions Israeli "security" 14 times while referring to the Palestinians only in terms of rights, claims, needs, requirements and aspirations. This stark imbalance will have to be righted before American-Arab contacts can lead to general agreement on the negotiating principles that will then have to be translated into an actual negotiation in which Arabs and Israelis sit down and talk peace, for the first time this century. As the shape of the table is agreed upon between the Arabs and the United States, the Israelis will be brought into the picture -- if they are genuinely interested in talking

Reagan is coming to grips with the Middle East issue

Editor's note: Following is an article by Jody Powell published recently in the Los Angeles Times. The writer is a former White House spokesman.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S speech on the Middle East two weeks ago was noteworthy, perhaps evenpraiseworthy, but not because what he said was particularly new.

Opposition to settlements in the occupied territories and to Israeli annexation or permanent control of the West Bank has been the declared policy of all his predecessors since 1967.

Every president who was ever asked has been against an independent Palestinian state. All have been committed to an

"undivided Jerusalem." and the proposition that "its final status should be determined through negotiations" came directly from the Camp David accords.

Even the proposal for a Palestinian homeland on the West Bank "in association with Jordan" had been publicly endorsed by at least two of Reagan's predecessors.

The speech did not signal a change in the role of the United States from a "mediator" to a "full partner" -- despite the excitement of some commentators who ought to know better. When the Camp David summit was announced in August, 1978, it was also announced that the United States would be a "full partner" in the negotiations. When Jimmy Carter, Menachem Begin and Anwar Sadat met four weeks later, the negotiating process consisted almost entirely of the presentation of American proposals, followed by weary shuttling between the Israeli and Egyptian delegations until agreement was finally rea-

Nor did the speech, in whole or in part, constitute a departure from or a violation of the Camp David agreement, despite the screams from Jerusalem. Understanding the Israeli reaction requires a word about what was done at Camp David and what Begin has tried to do since then.

In the past few years, the Israeli government has begun to insist that its interpretation of these creative ambiguities is the only legitimate interpretation. When others have dared to differ, Begin has been quick to accuse them of "abandoning Camp David" and to threaten not to fulfill agreements that he had made, such as the Sinai withdrawal

Even more audacious has been the attempt to muzzle American presidents by claiming. in effect, that it is a "violation to take public positions that were not included in the accords only if one accepts this absurd proposition can the president's proposal of a selfgoverning entity and association with Jordan be denounced as contrary to Camp David.

The same is true for the call for a freeze on settlements. Nothing in the Camp David accords commits any of the parties to any specific position on settlements. Begin's spear carriers in this country, who refer to the freeze proposal as "contrary to Camp David" and a "double-cross", might be sur-prised to learn that he made a private commitment to President Carter at Camp David to restrict settlements, but later withdrew it, saving that he could not get his cabinet to go along.

The idea that the president's proposals were made possible by the historic opportunity created by the invasion of Lebanon is almost as ridiculous. One might more accurately say that the speech was made necessary by that invasion and our limp-wristed reaction to

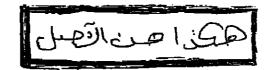

Still, the speech is noteworthy for two reasons:

Some of what was said is a departure not from the policies of previous administrations but from the positions of this administration. Specifically, the president's call for a freeze was his first endorsement of the longlasting American opposition to settlements. His proposal of a Palestinian entity on the West Bank reversed his earlier suggestion that the Palestinians look for their bomeland on the East Bank (implying that it just might be all right for Israel to keep the West Bank). In general, the speech certainly seemed to indicate that the president no longer feels compelled to let our foreign policy be made in Jerusalem.

But the primary reason the speech is important is that it has a speech -- a formal proposal, presented publicly. A public proposal puts your prestige on the line. It requires a public response, and if that response is negative you can t iust walk away.

The president certainly understood all that, but he made the speech anyway. If that is a message from the speech -- that the president is prepared to come to grips with the awesome, tiresome. frustrating complexities of the Middle East, and stay with it then the occasion is indeed worth noting and praising. I'm melined to think that it is.

Internal opposition

The idea of Radio Marti bas aroused strong opposition from the U.S. National Association of Broadcasters, who fear that Cuban retaliatory broadcasts will interfere with commercial broadcasting in southern and even northern states.

U.S. diplomats in Havana privately express the view that the hardline propaganda of Radio Marti would be counterproductive. They say the Voice of America, with its more objective technique, would more effectively achieve U.S. aims.

Koch: Star of the games

Four world records highlight European Athletics Championships

ATHENS (R) — Four world rec- the games, lowering her own ords pointed to the quality of competition at the European Athletics Championships which ended Sunday. But failure was also a feature of the seven-day games.

The most notable failure was the Soviet Union's faltering third-place finish in the medals table behind East and West Germany, although it would be hasty many fail to st to regard this as anything more in the games. than a temporary decline.

However, success stories were more conspicuous, with world record breakers Marita Koch of East Germany, Britain's Daley Thompson and West German Ulrike Meyfarth heading the toll of

Koch was the individual star of women's 400 metres record to 48.15 seconds and then, with a rolling start, breaking the 48-second barrier as she anchored the East German women's four by 400 metres relay team to a record run in 3:19.05.

Only in the middle and long distance track races did East Germany fail to stamp their authority

They made a cleansweep of the individual sprint races, with Frank Emmelmann emerging as the only triple medal winner of the championships by finishing first in the 100 metres, third in the 200 and second in the four by 100 relay.

Their field event successes included the continuing domination of the men's shot by the mighty Udo Beyer and Olympic Chahis very best form after a lean sea-

Daley Thompson's decathlon world record was the highlight of the British team's performance.

Thompson conclusively won his showdown with Juergen Hingsen, regaining the world record from the West German with a tally of 8,744 points. Still only 24 and as fiercely competitive as ever, Thompson looks certain to press even closer to the 9,000 points mark. Overall, though, Britain did worse than they expected. The defeats of Coe and Moorcroft were major disappointments.

Again the point was driven home that breaking world records mpion Lutz Domrowski's long in non-competitive races and winjump victory, marking a return to ning titles at major championships are two completely different

> In fairness to Coe, injury and a possible blood disorder may have contributed to his defeat by West German Hans-Peter Ferner in the 800 metres final.

But Moorcroft, taut with nerves and feeling "dead from the start." was simply outraced in the 5,000 metres final by the seasoned Thomas Wessinghage, also of West Germany.

Steve Cram registered Britain's solitary track success in the 1,500 metres and was one of the first to suggest that his victory might mark the start of a new era of British middle-distance running, the post Coe-Ovett era.

"I am sure I can carry on the tradition of Coe and Ovett," said Cram after a remarkable run in which he broke the field 600 metres from home.

Wessinghage and Ferner were two of five West German winners in men's track events, Harald Schmid in the 400 metres hurdles. Hartmut Weber in the 400 metres and Patriz Ilg in the steeplechase being the others.

The other major West German success was in the women's high jump where Ulrike Meyfarth raised the world record by one centimetre to 2.02 metres.

Meyfarth was the youngest Olympic Champion in history when winning a gold medal at the age of 16 in 1972.

Arnoux wins Italian Grand Prix

MONZA, Italy (R) - Frenchman Rene Amoux won the Italian Grand Prix motor race here Sunday but the destination of the 1982 world drivers' title remained undecided.

Renault driver Amoux led almost throughout in his turbocharged Renault and finished well clear of the Ferrari of compatriot Patrick Tambav. American Mario Andretti, making only his second appearance of the season, finished an impressive third in the second Ferrari, while Briton John Watson closed the gap on championship leader Keke : Watson's effort earned him three valuable championship points and the chance of snatching the crown from Rosberg in the last race of the season in Las Vegas on Sept. 25.

Rosberg's Williams lost its rear wing and he failed to finish among the points.

The setback meant Rosberg remained top of the standings with 42 points and Watson, the only driver able to catch him, on 33. If Rosberg fails to finish among the top six in Las Vegas and Watson wins both men will have the same points total--and the Briton will take the championship on the number of races won.

Talbot withdraws sponsorship of Talbot-Ligier

Rosberg of Finland with fourth place.

MONZA, Italy (R) — The Talbot division of Pengeot is withdrawing its sponsorship of the Talbot-Ligier Formula One racing team next season, a Ligier spokesman said Sunday.

But the French team managed by Guy Ligier will continue to be backed by Gitanes cigarettes and will enter next year's championship without the Talbot emblem.

In a statement issued Saturday night Ligier and Jean Boillot, head of Pengeot's car division, said the French car manufacturer would maintain technical but not financial support of the Ligier team in Ligier will also change engines next season, from its present conventionally-powered Matra V 12 to a turbo-charged model supplied by Renault.

After a promising 1981 season when their top driver, Jacques Lattite of France, took fourth place in the drivers' championship, Ligier-Talbot have so far gained only one second, two thirds and one sixth placing in the 14 Grand Prix races this year.

American Eddie Cheever, their second driver, will transfer to Renault next season.

Chris Lloyd claims her 6th U.S. Open title in 8 years

It was also Lloyd's 66th triumph since she played her first U.S. Open in 1971 and earned her $90,000.

The victory earned Lloyd $90,000.

Lloyd had a far easier time against 20-year-old Mandlikova than she did in beating her in three sets when she won ber fifth title two years ago.

Mandlikova had demonstrated a new-found patience to complement her power game in beating bolder Tracy Austin and seventh-seeded Pam Shriver en route to the final.

But Saturday that patience was never evident as she went for too many winners at inopportune moments and was unable to sustain any consistency with her groundstrokes.

Kuwaiti emir criticises OPEC members

KUWAIT (R) — The emir of Kuwait Sunday criticised some other OPEC countries for creating a world oil crisis by breaking the exporter group's production and price agreements.

IMF fights to bail out

Mexico

MEXICO CITY (R) - The International Monetary Fund (IMF), negotiating big credits to bail out debt-laden Mexico, faces a tough fight to convince the staunchly nationalistic country of its good intentions.

Reports last week of serious hitches in credit talks between them came as no surprise to foreign bankers and diplomats here.

to face a resolution considering the suspension of Israel from the Vienna-based agency for not allowing inspections of all its nuclear installations, an IAEA spokesman said. Prof. Semenov said the first conference would cover the social as well as technological problems of nuclear power but delegates would not touch on purely political issues. But Western diplomats said South Africa was expected to come under heavy criticism at the meeting for its apartheid (racial separation) policy, as the IAEA, set up in 1957 to promote peaceful nuclear energy and prevent the diversion of nuclear materials to military use, had grown into an active political forum.

Prof. Semenov said the conference was originally called three decades of nuclear power but its organisers differed as to whether the first atomic power had been generated by a U.S. reactor in 1952 or a

More than eight per cent of the world's electricity is now produced by 272 nuclear power plants and a further 236 are under construction. By 1985, the IAEA predicts 17 per cent of the world's electricity will be generated by over 400 plants.

Western diplomats said the agency was once carved into two East-West camps but that now the North-South divide between the nuclear-haves and the nuclear-have nots was the dominant split. Only four developing countries were operating seven nuclear power plants among them last year, according to the agency's annual The Group of 77 developing countries would try to block the agency's budget at the general conference to press demands for more technical assistance from the nuclear super-powers, diplomats pre-

European Community, Third World to decide future world textile trade

BRUSSELS (R) - Western European and developing nations begin a crucial negotiating round here Monday which may decide the future of the world trade in textiles.

The 10-nation European Community, the largest market for Third World textile exporters, is seeking to break a deadlock with its key suppliers over new four-year import agreements.

But its demands for strict limits on the amount of clothing it receives have been bitterly attacked by exporting nations as intransigeant and protectionist.

The talks, expected by diplomats to continue for several days, if not weeks, are being held under the guidelines of the multifibre arrangement (MFA) which the Community has threatened to quit if satisfactory deals are not reached this year.

Diplomats said such a move could herald the collapse of the whole international agreement, which governs 80 per cent of the world textile trade.

Li would also poison relations between Western Europe and developing nations, they said. A first round of negotiations, which finished in July, produced new deals between the Community and 14 developing nations, but officials in Brussels acknowledge these were relatively minor exporters. Major suppliers Hong Kong, South Korea and Macao were among 12 other countries to break off talks after making little or no headway, diplomats said. This led the Commu issue a strong warning to the "rebels" that they faced unilateral action on import levels if they did not accept the Common Market's

The 12 replied with a scathing attack at a meeting this month in Geneva, saying the Community's tough negotiating stance "showed utter contempt for the MFA", the diplomats said.

And Hong Kong, whose textile trade accounts for more than 40 per cent of its export revenue, has said the limitations sought by the Community have scant economic justification.

But the Community, mindful of its own ailing textile industry which has been battered by fierce competition and recession, argues that its demands are fully justified.

Textile trade with developing nations under the MFA left the Community with a balance of payments deficit of $3.7 billion in 1980, Mr. Krenzler told journalists.

The report said that although the Soviet Union should be a strong exporter of manufactured goods, finished goods comprised only about three to four per cent of Soviet exports. Total trade with Western industrial nations increased from five billion dollars in 1970 to $54 billion by 1981. By 1985, trade could rise to about $66 billion but the The discussions, in Mexico City

Mr. Hua, ironically at 61 hitherto the youngest member of the politburo standing committee, had also been a vice-chairman.

Sunday's meeting, the first plenary session of the new 210member central committee, appointed a 25-member politburo with several new faces.

It also appointed a new secretariat, with nine full secretaries and two "alternate" secretaries slightly lower in rank.

Several older members of the former 12-man secretariat were promoted to the politburo.

The hint came in a report by an official anti-corruption body called the party disciplinary commission, approved Saturday, stating it had worked hard and "won initial successes."

Diplomatic sources said this indicated China's leaders felt the commission had so far failed to make a great impact in fighting widespread corruption.

They said most officials exposed in the anti-corruption campaign, which started last year, held fairly junior posts, despite reports freely circulating among Chinese that some of the country's highest leaders are involved in graft.

The most senior figure accused of corruption in the official press was Deputy Commerce Minister Yang Yibang. He was forced to resign after he was found to have accepted bribes and to have shown poor judgement in petrochemical deals with a Hong Kong company.

ROME (R)—A bill which for the first time in Italy's history outlaws association with the mafia cleared its last hurdle in parliament Sat-urday night when it was approved by a senate commission, parliamentary sources said. But the bill, which will give investigators unprecedented powers to probe main sources of power and wealth, would not become law until the end of the month because of a constitutional technicality, the sources said.

The bill went through with the support of all parties except the neo-fascist Italian Social Movement (MSI), which abstained, and the tiny Radical Party which opposed it. The murder in Sicily last week of anti-mafia police chief Gen. Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa speeded up dramatically the bill's passage through par-

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky (R) -Five years after the death in detention of jailed black consciousness leader Steve Biko, the situation for blacks under apartheid in South Africa is far worse, Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu

Bishop Tutu, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, said in an interview with Reuters Saturday that after the outcry over Biko's death on Sept. 12, 1977, there was hope for "a very significant change in the situation in our country.

But, he added, "I would say that... the situation has gotten worse, far worse. I'm afraid that unless something happens qui-ckly, we may be faced with Arm-

MANILA (R) — The Philippines' durable strongman, President Ferdinand Marcos, starts a visit to the United States on Wednesday that will provoke a propaganda battle between the Manila administration and its critics.

With the former American colony firmly entrenched as one of the staunchest allies of the U.S. in Asia and with a welter of political, economic, military and social ties binding the two nations, the visit is unlikely to produce dramatic initiatives and Mr. Marcos can expect warmth from White House.

However, the Marcos administration and its vociferous cri-, tics on both sides of the Pacific are gearing themselves for a major war of words over such issues as human rights, alleged subversion and U.S. military ba lippines.

By Dalton de Silva

COLOMBO (R) — Sri Lanka's main opposition group has received a big boost in the run-up to next month's presidential election after being plagued for the past year by dissension.

The elections commissioner has given official recognition to former Prime Minister Sirima Bandaranaike's Sri Lanka Freedom Party (SLFP), rejecting an application by a group of party rebels.

The SLFP was one of 12 recognised political parties until the dissidents broke it up last year and requested to be officially regarded as the lawful party.

The commissioner's ruling will again enable to SLFP to use in election campaigning the "hand" symbol, identified with the party since it was founded 31 years ago. Soon after the commissioner's decision was announced, the dissidents' leader, Maithripala Sen-

presidents, Hector Kobbekaduwa, for the presidential contest. His candidature is reported to have been endorsed by Mrs. Bandaranaike, who had been under pressure from a section in the party to nominate her son,

Mr. Kobbekaduwa, a former minister, is expected to provide the main challenge to President Junius Jayewardene, who is seeking re-election.

Mr. Jayewardene, whose sixyear term was to end in February 1984, called the election prematurely to take advantage of the disarray in opposition ranks analysts said.

The major opposition parties decided nearly two months ago to to defeat Mr. Javewardene but have so far been unable to agree

Mr. Jayewardene's main rival would normally have been Mrs. Bandaranaike, prime minister for two terms from 1960 to 1965 and from 1970 to 1977.

But she is barred from running for the presidency.

Mrs. Bandaranaike was stripped of her civic rights for seven years and expelled from par-liament in Oct. 1980 after a presidential commission found her guilty of abuse of power during her second term as prime minister.

By Andrew Hill

NAIROBI — Thousands of nervous Asians are considering emigration from Kenya after being the main target of looting in last month's failed coup, diplomatic sources say.

Several embassies in Nairobi are handling emigration inquiries from the prosperous 80,000strong Asian community at the rate of hundreds a week, the sources said, compared with only scores before the Aug. 1 rebellion.

An unconfirmed report in the Nairobi Times on Monday said the Central Bank was dealing with 3,500 foreign exchange app- But Mr. Keen was quoted as lications from Indian nationals seeking to leave Kenya.

But the newspaper later quoted an assistant minister in the office of President Daniel arap Moi as saving there was no reason for Asians to panic.

Members of the Asian community say their feeling of vulnerability has increased since the insurrection, started by junior members of Kenya's air force and crushed by the army.

In the days after the coup attempt, rumours spread like wildfire through the tightly-knit Asian community that rebels had singled out Asian women to be raped. One unconfirmed press report said 30 Asian women had been raped and several victims later killed themselves from shame.

"The only difference here is that while 159 Africans were lying Assistant Minister John Keen dead in the mortuary there was not one member of the Asian community killed.

"I see no reason therefore why they should panic, because Kenya has afforded and will continue to afford them a paradise of peace,"

"Since they happened to have more shops in the city centre they suffered most because they became victims, not because of religion, background or creed."

$120 million damage

President Moi has estimated damage caused by looting at 1.2 billion shillings ($120 million), and the return of looted goods recovered by security forces is still

Kenyan Asians control about 90 per cent of the country's retail trade, according to Western est-imates, and the "wahindi" as they are known in Swahili are blamed by many of Kenya's 17 million Africans for periodic shortages worse."

Many traders say they lost their entire stock in the looting. Hi-fi equipment, radios, and televisions, all of which need special licences to be imported, were among the most highly-prized objects of plunder.

Third World diplomats say that Kenyan Asians began to feel neryous about their future at the start of this year when President Moi accused them of ruining the economy through smuggling and said. that anyone caught would be deported.

"Instead of using their advanced knowledge in business to help Africans improve their profit margins, Asians in this country are ruining the economy by smuggling currency out and even hoarding essential goods," he said.

One diplomat said he thought the current spate of emigration inquiries was "largely an insurance policy so that they have somewhere to go if things get leave they should not use the attempted coup as an excuse because law and order was restored within a matter of three hours. What more security do they want?"

Kenya's Asians trace their presence in the country to the turn of the century, when British colonial rulers imported Indian labour to help build a railway to the riches of neighbouring Uganda from the Indian Ocean.

The Kenyan Asiana have had a sense of apprehension since Ugandan dictator Idi Amin expelled his country's 70,000-strong Asian community in 1972 under an "economic war" aimed at returning Uganda's wealth to its African population.

Ironically the latest unease among Kenyan Asians coincides with the passing of a bill in Uganda last week setting out conditions under which expelled Asians can return to claim confiscated pro-

Here's another chance for you to demonstrate your skill at handling the dummy. How would you play four spades after West leads a club? North-South were using a

20-21 point two no trump opening bid. Nothing else about the auction was remarkable, and the final contract was excellent. Take a bow if you elected to finesse the jack of clubs at trick one. That play cannot cost - if the jack loses, the two high clubs in dummy will take care of your two diamond losers, so you are just trading trick for trick in the minor suits. But when the jack of clubs wins, what do you do next? You can virtually claim your contract! Cash the aceking of clubs for two diamond discards. Then cash the ace of diamonds and ruff a diamond in hand. Now lay down the king of spades. If both defenders follow, you are playing for an overtrick. When East shows out, however, you are not in the least dismayed. You lead a trump to the ace, ruff dummy's last diamond and now present West with his trump trick. West is in trouble. (Note that East would be in a similar predicament if it were he who started with three trumps.) The only safe suit to lead is hearts. Declarer, simply covers any heart that West leads. East can win the trick as cheaply as he likes, but he is end played. If he leads a minor suit, you can ruff in one hand while discarding a heart from the other. If he leads a heart, he is giving dummy a heart trick. Either way, the defenders cannot make more than one trump trick and two hearts. Observe that the contract cannot be defeated with any lead. If the defenders start with hearts, West can get a ruff but his trump trick vanishes. And if East shifts after winning the first heart, West is end played when the minor suits have been cleared and he is presented with his trump trick.
